Twentieth-Century Literature

New to Duke University Press in 2015!

Focusing on literary-cultural production emerging from or responding to the twentieth century, broadly construed, Twentieth-Century Literature offers essays, grounded in a variety of approaches, that interrogate and enrich the ways we understand the literary cultures of the times. The journal considers how those cultures are bound up with the crucial intellectual, social, aesthetic, political, economic, and environmental developments that have shaped the early twenty-first century.

“This volume has great merit and will be valuable in advanced Russian language classes, in Russian literature courses on Bulgakov, or in classes on Soviet culture or theater.”

—Rachel May, Syracuse University

When Soviet censors approved Mikhail Bulgakov’s Дон Кихот, a stage adaptation of Don Quixote, they were unaware that they were sanctioning a subtle but powerful criticism of Stalinist rule. Bulgakov’s Don Quixote fits comfortably into the nineteenth-century Russian tradition of idealistic, troubled intellectuals, but Quixote’s quest becomes an allegory of the artist under the strictures of Stalin’s regime. Bulgakov did not live to see the play performed: it went into production in 1940, only months after his death.

MODERN LANGUAGE STUDIES

Modern Language Studies is a peer reviewed journal representing the wide-ranging critical and creative interests of Northeast Modern Language Association members. We publish scholarship, fiction and poetry, interviews with writers and artists, reviews, and commentary on the professions of teaching, research, and writing.

We are particularly interested in and welcome submissions of unpublished letters and other primary documents of literary historical interest; translations of creative writing by writers in literatures of the modern languages; and essays on pedagogy, the politics of higher education, graduate and faculty working conditions, and related topics.

Modern Language Studies is edited and produced in its entirety at Susquehanna University. For submission guidelines visit www.modernlanguagestudies.org. Send submissions, subscription inquiries, and correspondence to mls@susqu.edu.
